INTRODUCTION

It was not that long ago that people interested in Syriac studies who did not have the good fortune of living in ancient centers of learning in Europe or close to a handful of great university libraries or research institutions in North America were hamstrung by not having access to important and fundamental works of Syriac scholarship.

Institutions interested in developing new programs in Syriac studies were at a distinct disadvantage, too: while they might be able to purchase new materials in the field of Syriac and Eastern Christianity, older, rarer works were either extremely expensive to purchase or simply not available. A person, for instance, looking to buy Paul Bedjan's editions of Jacob of Sarugh's poetry might look long and hard for them and yet still not locate copies available for purchase, no matter how deep his or her pockets.

The advent of digitization initiatives by Google, Microsoft, the Bibliothéque Nationale de France, Brigham Young University, ULB Halle, Beth Mardutho (eBeth Arke), the Gouussen Library, and others, have, however, completely revolutionized this situation and had a radically democratizing effect on the study of Syriac. The world, so to speak, is now flat. So long as he or she has access to the internet, a student can now be anywhere in the world and read, enjoy, and make use of the riches of centuries of Syriac scholarship. The efforts of Sergey Minov and his team at Hebrew University have furthermore greatly facilitated this task by combining the standard bibliographies of Moss and Brock (and others) and putting them into a searchable database, online.

At the same time, the amazing efforts of the Hill Museum and Manuscript Library, led by the learned and indefatigable Columba Stewart and his remarkable lead cataloger, Adam McCollum, are both preserving manuscript collections throughout the Middle East and making them accessible to scholars and diaspora communities in ways both unprecedented and previously unimaginable. Things that were impossible to see only a few years ago, or known only through descriptions in articles written by Arthur Vööbus, are now readily available to anyone who contacts the good people at HMML. When HMML's preservation work is complete in the Middle East and their digitized manuscripts have been inventoried, we will have an even richer and more complete understanding of the history of Syriac literature; indeed, their efforts hold the promise of making many fundamental Syriac instruments out-of-date.

These initiatives and a host of other similar ones are radically changing the nature of Syriac studies and doing so in an exponential manner. George Kiraz and Gorgias Press have, at great effort, scanned and put back into print a high percentage of the important books from the golden era of Syriac studies in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

More information, better resources, and a richer breadth of literature are now readily available to more people, everywhere. One of the happiest results of these developments is that people living in the Middle East and India, the homes of the Syriac Christian tradition, are now able to access texts and study aids which have previously only been found in libraries outside the two regions. The internet has made it possible for these texts to, as it were, return home.

Our goal for these pages is to collect, organize, and annotate as many of the fundamental works of Syriac scholarship that are to be found freely available online. We believe firmly that the free and open access of scholarly materials should be encouraged and will be a fundamental, non-negotiable cornerstone of future scholarship. All of the books linked herein are (to our best knowledge) out of copyright and hosted by digital storehouses like Google, Archive.org, and Hathi Trust. We hope to expand the number of items we link to as more resources become freely available.

Our ultimate aim is to make as much information and as many resources pertaining to Syriac studies freely and easily available to as many people as possible. We would be thrilled if this site would also serve to promote the grander cause of open access scholarship. Please feel free to get in touch with us if you have suggestions, comments, or questions about the site.

HISTORIES OF SYRIAC LITERATURE

1. 'Abdisho' bar Brikha, *Catalog of Syriac Books

At the root of all studies of the history of Syriac literature is the Catalog of Books of the East Syrian 'Abdisho' bar Brikha (d. 1318). His work is analogous to Photios' Bibliotheca or the Suda for the history of Greek literature and to Ibn al-Nadim for Arabic. He lists many works that are now lost or fragmentary. His Catalog was first published by Assemani in the Bibliotheca Orientalis (see below). An English translation can be found here, and this is an overview of the work.

2. S.P. Brock, A Brief Outline of Syriac Literature (Kottayam, 1997).

For newcomers to the history of Syriac literature, this hard-to-find and now out-of-print volume is a very helpful touchstone. It represents an expert simplification of the major scholarly literary histories listed below. We have now linked to a version which has the entire Brief Outline. We originally linked to a smaller version which did not have the chrestomathy of texts at the back of the volume; that version can still be found here.

3. Baumstark, Geschichte der Syrischen Literatur (Bonn, 1922).

Ninety years after its publication, this is still the standard history of Syriac literature. Baumstark's mastery of information in Syriac manuscript catalogs and his ability to piece together historical information from a variety of different sources was phenomenal. This book represents a storehouse of knowledge. When investigating an author, however, one should be aware that catalogs had not yet appeared of Mingana's very important collection in Birmingham; therefore, Mingana's indices should always be consulted, in addition to Baumstark. Baumstark also made use of catalogs by Scher of MSS collections in the Middle East which were destroyed or moved in the context of the widespread massacres of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. This means that MSS he cites from these collections may not be there or may unfortunately no longer even exist. Desreumaux's Repertoire should be consulted when trying to track down the present location of these manuscripts. HMML's work cataloging the manuscript riches of Middle Eastern collections also offers the potential for updating some entries in Baumstark (and perhaps adding a few more). The New Finds at St Catherine's, both fragments and full manuscripts, also are not reflected in Baumstark's learned footnotes. New finds at Dayr al-Suryan also promise to add to our knowledge of Syriac literature.

- 4. P. Bettiolo, "Lineamenti di patrologia siriaca", in Complementi interdisciplinari di patrologia, ed. A. Quacquarelli, 503–603 (Rome, 1989).
- 5. P. Bettiolo, "Syriac Literature", in Patrology V: The Eastern Fathers from the Council of Chalcedon (451) to John of Damascus (†750), ed. A. Berardino, 407–490 (Cambridge, 2006).

These are two lesser-known, yet still very useful overviews of Syriac language and literature. Bettiolo's article from 2006 is a translation of an article he published in Italian in 2000 and represents the most recent bibliographic overview of Syriac literature that we are aware of.

6. M. Albert, "Langue et littérature syriaques", in Christianismes orientaux: Introduction à l'étude des langues et des littératures, 297–375 (Paris, 1993).

An extremely useful and well-organized introduction to Syriac bibliography, literature, and instrumenta. In general, the volume from which it is taken, Christianismes orientaux, is a wonderful resource, one which covers all the languages of the Christian Orient. It should be on the bookshelf of any student interested in doing serious study of this subject.

7. J.S. Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, 4 vols. in 3. (Rome, 1719–1728). vol. 1., vol. 2, vol. 3.1, vol. 3.2 (and here)

The BO was and is a landmark in the history of Syriac scholarship in the West. If all philosophy is a footnote to Plato, as has been said, then at some level, all Syriac scholarship is a footnote to (and expansion of) the amazing scholarship of Assemani. Hundreds of years after its publication, there is still nothing quite like it. Some of the texts Assemani published (e.g., 'Abdisho's Catalogue of Syriac Books, mentioned above) have never been superseded. Here is a short account of Assemani's life, in Arabic. Here is the same, in Latin.

8. J.-B. Chabot, Litterature syriaque (Paris, 1935).

This history of Syriac literature is not as well known, but is nevertheless useful and concise.

9. Ignatius Ortiz de Urbina, Patrologia Syriaca (Rome, 1958).

In Latin. Organized topically and extremely useful once one has figured out how to use it, even though it is now dated.

10. P. Peeters, Bibliotheca Hagiographica Orientalis (Brussels, 1910).

Although it has been surpassed by Fiey and by the BSO, this classic work by Paul Peeters remains a valuable store of information.

11. R. Duval, La litterature syriaque (Paris, 1907).

12. W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (London, 1894).

Based on Wright's Encyclopedia Britannica article. The information on biblical versions is now dated and should not be relied upon, but Wright is still very useful for later material. Strangely, Wright displays a dismissive and even hostile attitude to Syriac literature, describing it as mediocre, at the beginning of this volume, even though he spent years of his life working with Syriac materials. An obituary of William Wright. A long notice on his life, here.

13. I.A. Barsoum, The Scattered Pearls: A History of Syriac Literature and Sciences, 2nd ed, Trans. M. Moosa (New York, 1965).

Barsoum had an extremely thorough knowledge of Syrian Orthodox manuscript collections in the Middle East, which is one of the strong suits of this particular history of Syriac literature.

And because of the digitization efforts of HMML, it is now possible to track down specific MSS which Barsoum refers to.

Further Notes:

1. Ibn al-Nadim's *Kitab al-Fihrist

is a very important source for the history of Arabic and Arabic literature. It also contains a great deal of information about Syriac and Syriac translations into Arabic as well as those who did the translating. (Ed. Gustav Flügel, 2 vols. Leipzig, 1871–1872. (Volumes 1–2; Volume 2 alone).

2. Ibn Abī ‘Uṣaybi‘a’s ‘Uyūn al-anbā’ fī ṭabaqāt al-aṭibbā’

contains much important information about Aramaic-speaking Christian doctors in the medieval Muslim world. Roger Pearse recently discovered an English translation of this work which was executed in the middle part of the 20th century by an Israeli orientalist. He has now placed the translation online. For the Arabic version, go here: Volume 1; Volume 2.

3. Ibn al-Qifti

is another important medieval Arabic source which contains much useful information about Syriac authors, especially ones involved in medicine and the translation of Greek works into Syriac and Arabic. The standard critical edition of Ibn al-Qifti’s Tarikh al-Hukama was published in 1903 by Julius Lippert and can be found here.

4. Sebastian P. Brock, "Introduction to Syriac Studies" (and other articles), in Horizons in Semitic Studies.

5. Eberhard Nestle’s bibliography

is the best available listing of early Syriac printed materials. Digitization efforts at major libraries have now made it possible to see many of these items.

6. Abu al-Barakat’s (d. 1324) Catalog of Christian (Arabic)

literature is also of interest to Syriacists. Here is Reidel's edition and here is Adam McCollum's English translation.

LEXICA, DICTIONARIES, AND GLOSSARIES

Notes:

- The use of lexica in pdf format can in fact be faster than using them in the traditional book format. This requires, however, bookmarking the pdf, at least according to letter of the alphabet, if not in an even more granular fashion.
- The Dukhrana Biblical Research site has a wonderful search engine which allows you to type in a Syriac word and get back results from a number of Syriac dictionaries: Bar Bahlul, J. Payne Smith (Mrs. Margoliouth), Jennings, Costaz, Manna, and Audo. The Thesaurus and Brockelmann, probably the two best lexica (along with Manna and Audo), however, are not part of the search, so if one is really looking into the meaning of a word, these two main resources must be consulted as well.
- Manna is also searchable online here.
- Costaz is also searchable online here.

Major Lexica

1. R. Payne Smith, Thesaurus Syriacus (Oxford, 1879-1901). Volume 1; Volume 2.

In many ways, the Thesaurus functions as an index to much of the Syriac literature published up until the late nineteenth century. Among its virtues are its rich citations and the many definitions of idioms which it provides, definitions which one cannot find, for instance, in Brockelmann. When confronted with a puzzling proper name or a place name, the Thesaurus is often the best place to go to find answers, or at least help. An obituary of Robert Payne Smith. Another one here. A death notice here. An entry on him while he was still alive here. De Lagarde's harsh criticisms of the first fascicle of the Thesaurus can be read here.

2. J. Payne Smith (Mrs. Margoliouth), A Compendious Syriac Dictionary (Oxford, 1903).

Even with the appearance of Sokoloff's English translation of Brockelmann's second edition, the Compendious Syriac Dictionary remains in many ways the best available Syriac dictionary in English. There is the occasional lapse — shroro/shrara (“truth”) somehow got left out, for example — but it contains definitions of idioms and phrases which often cannot be found in other dictionaries written in western languages. Unfortunately, citations for texts cited in the Compendious Syriac Dictionary are not given, so if one sees a passage and wants to know the source, recourse must be made to the corresponding entry in the Thesaurus. When it was published, it was criticized for, among other things, not including all the vocabulary to be found in the Syriac Bible. Also, if you find a Greek word in Syriac, you will often have to go to Brockelmann for help. Whatever its shortcomings, this dictionary has been the first choice of students of Syriac for over a century and it has exerted an enormous influence on the field of Syriac studies.

3. J.P. Margoliouth, Supplement to the Thesaurus Syriacus of R. Payne Smith (Oxford, 1927).

It was said of Mrs. Margoliouth that when Mingana came across a word in Syriac that he didn't know, he would ask her for help. This supplement covers texts that were published after the completion of the Thesaurus. The words found here are often technical, scientific, or non-Syriac in their origin.

4. C. Brockelmann, Lexicon Syriacum, 1st ed. (Edinburgh-Berlin, 1895).

This was greatly surpassed by the second edition of Brockelmann's magisterial work, but the first edition is not completely without merit: the Latin-Syriac glossary at the back, which gives the Syriac word next to the Latin, rather than pointing the reader to the page where the Syriac equivalent can be found, is much more convenient than the Latin reverse index of the Second edition. The first edition, too, is no small feat of lexicography. R.D. Wilson's review of Mrs. Margoliouth's Compendious Syriac Dictionary compared the Compendious Syriac Dictionary unfavorably with Brockelmann's first edition: he preferred the organization according to root, rather than alphabetically, and suggested that Brockelmann had better coverage of biblical (and other) vocabulary. Brockelmann completed this first edition of his lexicon before he turned 30, a humbling fact to contemplate.

5. L. Costaz, Dictionnaire syriaque-français / Syriac-English dictionary (Beirut, 1963).

Based on Brockelmann; until the appearance of Sokoloff's English translation, Costaz's dictionary functioned as a back door into that great lexicon for those who either found Brockelmann intimidating or for whom the Latin was too cumbersome. It is a student's version of Brockelmann in much the same way that Hava's Arabic dictionary was meant to provide easier access to the riches found in Kazimirska (see below). Costaz has a very useful appendix on proper names as well, which is a quick and easy place to go when one is not sure how to vocalize a name or what the English (or Arabic or French) equivalent of a Syriac name is.

This Syriac-Syriac dictionary contains more entries than any other Syriac dictionary in existence; it contains more than even the great Thesaurus Syriacus. For those who find its Syriac-Syriac format a bit challenging, Emmanuel Thelly has produced a Syriac-English-Malayalam Lexicon based on Audo which provides a back door to this work, much like Costaz did for Brockelmann.

7. R. Duval, Lexicon syriacum auctore Hassano bar Bahlule: Voces syriacas græcasque cum glossis syriacis et arabicis complectens. (Paris, 1888–1901). Volume 1; Volume 2; Volume 3.

A 10th-century Syriac-Arabic/Syriac lexicon, based on earlier lexica, including that of Hunayn b. Ishaq. It is an invaluable resource for a number of reasons, not the least because it quotes a number of sources which are no longer extant (especially pagan Syriac sources originating in Harran). Duval surveys all the sources of the book and also provides a very fascinating list of the different Aramaic dialects cited by Bar Bahlul (there are 16 total, for a study of these, go here).

Many of the words Bar Bahlul defines are Greek in origin and a number of them are unattested elsewhere in Syriac literature. Also see this page at Harvard.

8. R.J.H. Gottheil, ed. The Syriac-Arabic Glosses of Isho‘ bar ‘Ali, Atti della Reale Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, Memorie V, 13 (Rome 1908–1928). (also PDF links: Volume 1; Volume 2)

The second half of Bar ‘Ali’s ninth-century Syriac-Arabic lexicon. Bar ‘Ali was a student of Hunayn b. Ishaq and, his lexicon represents one of the two great Syriac lexica that have survived from the Middle Ages (the lexicon of Hunayn, for example, has been lost). The first half of Bar ‘Ali’s Lexicon was published by G. Hoffmann in a handwritten edition which, to the best of our knowledge, cannot be found at present on the Internet, though scanned copies of it do exist. The Thesaurus Syriacus, however, reproduces the definitions of both Bar ‘Ali and Bar Bahlul throughout.

9. Y.A. Manna, Qāmūs kaldānī-‘arabī / Vocabulaire chaldeen-arabe / Chaldean Arabic Dictionary, 2nd ed., with suppl. by R. Bidawid (Beirut, 1975).

This is an outstanding dictionary. Its main defect is that Manna does not provide citations to let one know what texts he is deriving his words and definitions from, but Syriac scholars have often made recourse to this dictionary and always with profit. For instance, Brockelmann’s second edition (still under copyright) is extraordinary in its coverage of rare words — it is a not uncommon experience to be reading an off-the-beaten-track text, come across an unknown or unfamiliar word, not find it in Mrs. Margoliouth’s Dictionary or the Thesaurus, and then to find its meaning in Brockelmann, with a citation from precisely (and sometimes, only) the passage being read. Brockelmann also has meanings which you cannot find in Payne Smith (but, it should be noted, the opposite is sometimes true), and reading an author like Jacob of Sarugh is much easier when done with Brockelmann at one’s side. With all this said, however, we have, on a number of occasions, found meanings in Manna that are in neither Brockelmann nor in Payne Smith. This can be especially true when reading unpublished texts in manuscript. Manna is definitely a lexical resource that is worth keeping ready to hand. It is Syriac-Arabic, but even a person with a basic grasp of the Arabic alphabet and a lexicon like Steingass’s Arabic-English Dictionary nearby (which lists words alphabetically rather than by root) can profit from using Manna. It is a real gem and an underappreciated resource in the world of Syriac dictionaries. This is a re-typing of Manna, in modern Arabic and Syriac fonts.

10. G. Cardahi, Al-Lobab, seu Dictionarium syro-arabicum, 2 vols. (Beirut, 1887—1891).
Volume 1 is not online, so far as we can tell; Volume 2 can be found here.

A Syriac-Arabic dictionary. Its strongest feature is the rich number of idioms and expressions it defines; apart from this, however, it is rather weak and should never be among the first three or even four dictionaries one consults. Go here if you find an idiom whose definition you cannot find somewhere else, i.e., the Thesaurus or Manna.

11. C. Schaaf, Lexicon Syriacum Concordantiale, 2nd ed. (Leiden, 1717).

This is a wonderful resource. It is a Syriac-Latin Lexicon to the NT. What makes it so useful is that it also functions as a concordance of the entire NT as well. For each word, it gives every time it occurs in the New Testament. A great tool for tracking down a Biblical citation in an author — but keep in mind, the coverage here is for the Peshitta; if an author is citing the Old Syriac or Harklean, and you use Schaaf to try to locate the reference, you may not find what you are looking for.

12. E. Castell, Lexicon Syriacum, ex eius lexico heptaglotto seorsim typis describi curavit (Göttingen, 1788).

Castell and Michaelis was the standard Syriac lexicon for European scholars until it was replaced by the Thesaurus Syriacus in the late 19th century. Read Payne Smith's remarks (and here) about the difficulties of working with Syriac texts in the middle of the nineteenth century, when this was the best lexicon available.

13. W. Jennings, Lexicon to the Syriac New Testament (Oxford, 1926).

The standard NT Peshitta Lexicon in English.

14. I. Loew, Aramaic Pflanzennamen (Leipzig, 1881).

A remarkable work of erudition on plant names in Aramaic; it draws extensively on Syriac sources like the Syriac Geponika.

15. Kaniampampil, Curian Corepiscopa. Moran Etho: A concise Syriac – English Dictionary. Kottayam: SEERI, 2004.

16. Thelly, Emmanuel. Syriac English Malayalam Lexicon. Kottayam: Deepika Book House, 1999.

17. Kalapurakkal, Anthrayos. Syriac Malayalam Dictionary. Alwaye: The Mar Sliha Press, 1940

18. Sokoloff, Michael. A Syriac Lexicon: A Syriac LexiconA Translation from the Latin, Correction, Expansion, and Update of C. Brockelmann's Lexicon Syriacum. Gorgias Press & Eisenbrauns: 2009

Other Lesser-Known Syriac Lexical Instruments

1. H.F. Whish, Clavis Syriaca: A Key to the Ancient Syriac Version, called "Peshitto," of the Four Holy Gospels (London and Cambridge, 1883).
2. J. Brun, Dictionarium Syriaco-Latinum (Beirut, 1895).
3. A.Gutbier, Lexicon Syriacum: Omnes Novi Testamenti syriaci dictiones et particulares complectens, rev. ed. E. Henderson (London, 1890 [1836/1667]). [NT + NT lexicon]
4. B.H. Cowper, "The Alphabet of Bardesanes", Journal of Sacred Literature and Biblical Record n.s. VI, 12 (1865): 465–466.

Lexica in Neighboring Languages

1. The Comprehensive Aramaic Lexicon

It covers Syriac and a host of other Aramaic dialects and can give you definitions. It allows you to do searches and to also “browse” a number of texts in these languages. The number of Syriac sources contained in the CAL, while considerable, is still only a drop in the bucket as far as just how much Syriac is out there.

2. F. Schulthess, Lexicon Syropalaestinum (Berlin, 1903).

For Christian Palestinian Aramaic, but very useful to students of Syriac who want to know usages and resonances of words in other Aramaic dialects.

3. M. Jastrow, Dictionary of Targumim, Talmud, and Midrashic Literature (London and New York, 1903).

Michael Sokoloff’s dictionaries of Palestinian, Babylonian, and Judean Aramaic have replaced this, but it is still a useful resource. See also Edward M. Cook, Glossary of Targum Onkelos (Leiden, 2008).

4. F. Justi, Iranisches Namenbuch (Marburg, 1895).

5. E.W. Lane, An Arabic-English Lexicon (London, 1863).

Still the best dictionary for classical Arabic in existence; it draws upon the great classical Arabic dictionaries for its information. Using Hans Wehr to read classical/medieval texts can be a dangerous (and misleading) game. Hava, Dozy, and most of all Kazimirski (vol. 1, vol. 2) can be much surer guides. Hava is based on Kazimirski and will often do the trick when one is looking for a quick and dirty definition. Steingass is a dictionary which is quite useful but frequently overlooked, which is a pity; it is essentially an English version of Wahr mund (vol. 1, vol. 2). Arranged alphabetically, Steingass is especially useful when one is feeling lazy and does not want to spend time hunting for a root.

6. W.E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (Oxford, 1939).

Tyndale House has other dictionaries on-line, for Biblical Hebrew and Aramaic. They also have a copy of the Compendious Syriac Dictionary which is very easy to use.

GRAMMARS

Modern Grammars

1. Theodor Nöldeke, A Compendious Syriac Grammar, trans. J.A. Crichton (London, 1904).

Still the standard Syriac grammar in any European language. Nöldeke's Mandäische Grammatik is useful for those interested in other Aramaic dialects, as is his grammar of the Neo-Aramaic of Urmia. One complaint of users of Nöldeke's Syriac grammar is that there is no index; the German original, however, is available on Google Books and searchable there.

2. R. Duval, Traite de grammaire syriaque (Paris, 1881).

The other great modern grammar of Syriac, after Nöldeke's. It contains material which cannot be found in Nöldeke; it is especially useful for the extensive paradigms at the beginning.

3. C. Brockelmann, Syrische Grammatik, mit Litteratur, Chrestomathie, und Glossar, 2nd ed. (Berlin, 1905).

NB: This is only the second edition (it was revised several more times). Brockelmann has a nice Chrestomathy and also has useful paradigms, though one may prefer those of Duval. Goshen-Gottstein published a Syriac-English glossary which was based on the texts of Brockelmann's Chrestomathy and which can be very useful if you are reading a text (e.g., the Life of Rabbula) which happens to be found in the Chrestomathy.

4. E. Nestle, Syriac Grammar with Bibliography, Chrestomathy and Glossary, Porta Linguarum Orientalium 5, trans. by R.S. Kennedy (Berlin, 1889). [German original]

Nestle's bibliography is the quickest and easiest guide to early Syriac printed material.

5. G. Cardahi, Al-manâhegh seu syntaxis et rhetoricae Syrorum institutiones (Rome, 1903).
6. Arayathinal, Thomas. Aramaic grammar, method Gaspey-Otto-Sauer Volume 1. Mannanam: St. Joseph's Press, 1959. 2 vols.

Further notes:

MANUSCRIPT CATALOGS

Note:

- OLIVER, the online catalog of HMML, contains information about an enormous number of manuscripts in collections throughout the Middle East. HMML can provide images of MSS, too, for a very reasonable cost; much cheaper (and faster) than any of the great libraries in Europe.

2. Dayr al-Suryān, Wadi al-Natrun, Egypt ("Monastery of the Syrians")

Contrary to common belief, the Vatican Library and the British Museum did not get hold of all the Syriac manuscripts present at Dayr al-Suryan in the Wadi Natrun in Egypt. More than three dozen manuscripts remain there. In 1901, an Arabic handlist was made of the remaining manuscripts there at Dayr al-Suryan and in the middle part of the 20th century, Murad Kamil made a more detailed description, a translated copy of which made it to Leiden, whence other copies of copies have floated around among scholars for years. At present, Sebastian Brock and Lucas van Rompay are working on a catalog of these codices, which promise to contain some truly exciting new material. First impressions (PDF) of the material present there are very exciting, indeed.

Here is Wright, supplementing the information in his monumental Catalogue, on the purchase of the Dayr al-Suryan convent by the merchants of Tikrit for 12,000 dinars.

Princeton (Princeton Theological Seminary)

There is an unpublished handlist of the Syriac manuscripts in the collection of Princeton Theological Seminary.

Rome (Vatican)

1. J.S. Assemani and S.E. Assemani, Biblioteca apostolica vaticana: Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae codicum manuscriptorum catalogus in tres partes distributus; in quarum prima Orientales, in altera Graeci, in tertia Latini Italici aliorumque Europaeorum idiomatum codices. vols. 2–3. (Repr. Paris, 1926).

There is now an online catalog for the Vatican Library for bibliography related to their manuscripts. The simple search includes basic options: you can search by MS number (SEGNATURA), or by author (AUTORE/NOME) of the bibliographical item, or by title or incipit. The advanced search includes many more options, which can be combined.

Saint Catherine's Monastery, the Sinai

1. A.S. Lewis, Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in the Convent of S. Catharine on Mount Sinai, Studia Sinaitica 1 (London, 1894).

Hiersemann 500 Catalog (1922)

Hiersemann 500 contains descriptions of a number of Syriac and Arabic manuscripts which originated at St. Catherine's but which ended up being sold on the antiquities market in Europe between the wars. Some of the manuscripts described in Hiersemann 500 were destroyed in the Second World War. This is an important source of information about Melkite Syriac MSS.

CHRONICLES AND HISTORIOGRAPHY

Guides to the Editions

1. S.P. Brock, "Syriac Historical Writing: A Survey of the Main Sources", Journal of the Iraq Academy, Syriac Corporation 5 (1979-1980): 1–30.

This classic article is the single best survey of and guide to chronicles and historical writing in Syriac. The article we have linked to is taken directly from the original publication and not from the reprint in one of Brock's Variorum volumes. Brock's article should be the starting point for anyone looking for an orientation to what is available in Syriac in terms of historical writing and also for anyone seeking bibliographic guidance.

2. S.P. Brock, "Syriac Sources for Seventh-Century History", BMGS 2 (1976): 17–36.

Another classic and foundational article by Brock which is useful and important for the student of Syriac historiography as well as the student of seventh-century history. An excellent compliment to Brock's article on the main sources of Syriac historical writing.

Michael the Syrian (d. 1199)

20. J.-B. Chabot, ed. and trans., Chronique de Michel le Syrien, patriarche jacobite d'Antioche (1166–1199) (Paris, 1899–1910). Volume 1; Volume 2; Volume 3; Volume 4.

Michael the Syrian in Armenian. (Text published in Jerusalem, 1871; French translation)

Drawing on other-lost works (e.g., the chronicles of Dionysios of Tell Mahre, John of Litarb and Jacob of Edessa) and at times confusing to use (there are three columns to navigate, each with a different focus), for medieval historians Michael the Syrian represents the most important of all Syriac chronicles. The Syriac text was published in volume 4 of Chabot's edition and translation; it was a reproduction of a hand-written copy based on an early modern, complete, copy of Michael that is now held in the Church of the Edessenes in Hayy al-Suryan in Aleppo. The scribe that Chabot had copy out the work did a remarkable job at reproducing this manuscript, but the Syriac text can nevertheless at times be very difficult to make out. Recently, HMML, Gorgias Press, and the Bishop of Aleppo joined forces to produce a facsimile edition of the Aleppo copy of Michael, the publication of which was a landmark. Arabic translations of Michael also exist, most importantly perhaps in the Christian village of Sadad in Syria, and it has been suggested that the Aleppo copy of Michael may or may not actually represent the entirety of Michael's original text--there may be sections which have been omitted or lost; studying the Syriac alongside the Arabic (which remains unpublished, but there are plans to put out a facsimile of the Arabic as well) may be able to help resolve this question.

Chronicon ad annum 1234

21. J.-B. Chabot, ed. Anonymi auctoris Chronicon ad annum Christi 1234 pertinens, CSCO 81, 82, 109; Syr. 36, 37, 56 (Paris, 1916, 1920, 1937). Volume 1 (Syriac); Volume 2 (Syriac); Volume 3 (Latin translation).

Secular history begins in volume 1, here.

Ecclesiastical history begins in volume 2, here.

See Brock's discussion here and here.

Bar Hebraeus (d. 1286)

A. Chronicon

22. A. Salihani, ed., Tarikh mukhtasar al-duwal (Beirut, 1890).
23. P. Bedjan, ed. Gregorii Barhebræi Chronicon Syriacum e codd. mss. emendatum ac punctis vocalibus adnotationibusque locupletatum (Paris, 1890).

Budge's English translation is not yet available in the public domain, but it has been transcribed.
 NB: He translated from Bedjan, but photolithographically reproduced (in reverse negative) a different MS.

See Brock's discussion here and here.

B. Ecclesiastical History

24. J.-B. Abbeloos and T.J. Lamy, eds. and trans., Gregorii Barhebræi Chronicon ecclesiasticum, 3 vols. (Paris, 1872–1877). Volume 1; Volume 2; Volume 3.

This edition has typos in it. The edition in the Oriental Institute in Oxford is the personal copy of Mrs. Margoliouth and you can read her emendations in the side margins if you have access to it. (It would be nice to have a scan of those!) UPenn has Nöldeke's personal copy and you can similarly read his emendations there if you have access to it; somebody, however, rebound the book and, tragically, cut the margins, so some of Nöldeke's corrections have been lost.

See Brock's discussion here and here.

Earlier Editions:

1. E. Pococke., ed., Historia Compendiosa Dynastarium (Oxford, 1663). (And here.) [= Tarikh mukhtasar al-duwal above]
2. E. Pococke, ed., Specimen historiae Arabum (Oxford, 1650).
3. J. White, Specimen historiae arabum; auctore Edvardo Pocockio. Accessit Historia veterum arabum ex Abu'l Feda: Cura Antonii I. Sylvestre de Sacy (Oxford, 1806).
4. P. Bruns and G.W. Kirsch, eds. Bar-Hebraei Chronicon Syriacum, 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1789). Volume 1; Volume 2.

It is good to have access to these older editions; if you use the Thesaurus Syriacus or certain older works, they will cite these editions rather than the newer ones. They are useful to know about for the purpose of tracking down references.

4. A.Mingana, ed., Sources syriaques, Vol. 1: Mšiha-Zkha (texte et traduction); Bar-Penkayé (texte) (Leipzig, 1908). (Syriac) (French translation)

This is a controversial East Syrian Chronicle; with a somewhat obscure and mysterious manuscript history, Fiey accused Mingana (posthumously) of having fabricated the entire text. More recent research has taken the edge off of some of Fiey's sharp criticisms and suggested that it be seen as a medieval compilation which has earlier material at its core. See especially, C. Jullien and F. Jullien, "La Chronique d'Arbèles. Propositions pour la fin d'une controverse," Oriens Christianus 85 (2001) 41–83.

JOURNALS

Note:

- We intend to improve this page of Journals by adding more journals to the list, but also by specifying exactly what is available online. Sometimes entire runs of periodicals have been opened to free access (e.g., Parole de l'orient) but others are limited to a sampling old issues published before 1922.
1. al-Machriq
  2. American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures (née Hebraica) (Vols. 1–28 [1884–1922] available full text); some are listed here also.
  3. Analecta Bollandiana (Vols. 1–27 [1882–1908] available full text)
  4. Bulletin of the John Rylands Library (Vols. 1–80 [1917–1998, irregular publication] available full text)

MAPS AND GEOGRAPHY

Notes:

- Looking up a place name in the Thesaurus Syriacus can often be a quick way to identify what you have encountered. The index to volume 3 of Wright's Catalogue of mss in the British Museum can be helpful when dealing with toponyms. Georg Hoffmann's Auszuge aus syrischen Akten persischer Martyer (Leipzig, 1880) is another important resource.
- Yaqut's Mu'jam al-buldan is the most important medieval Arabic geographic dictionary. It is organized alphabetically and one need only have very basic Arabic to make use of it. There is much useful information contained in Yaqut for the student of Syriac; he has well over 100 entries, for example, on monasteries, using information culled from other medieval sources, such as Shabushti's Kitab al-diyarat, or Book of Monasteries (as well as other, now-lost books of monasteries.)

Born-digital Mapping Resources

1. Pleiades

Contains everything in the Barrington Atlas...and more. A wonderful resource!

2. Digital Atlas of Roman and Medieval Civilizations

Mapping project at Harvard.

3. Orbis

Geo-spatial project at Stanford. Can help you calculate travel times between different points in the ancient world.

Geographical Books of Note

1. R. Dussaud, Topographie historique de la syrie antique et medievale (Paris, 1927).

A classic work on the historical geography of Syria.

2. G. Le Strange, Baghdad during the Abbasid Caliphate (Oxford, 1900).

3. G. Le Strange, The Lands of the Eastern Caliphate (Cambridge, 1905).

4. G. Le Strange, Palestine Under the Moslems (Boston and New York, 1890).

Old Baedeker Guides for Syria and Palestine can be read to give the student of Syriac literature a sense for travel and life in the region before the great changes brought about by the upheavals and technological advances of the twentieth century. Here is one from 1876, one from 1898, and one from 1912.
